Cropping on Strip and Terrace Shows Full Soil Program

Hope Office Inspects Four Local Farms on Tour Thursday Morning

GRASS FERTILIZER

Phosphate-Lime for Grass, Nitrate of Soda for Cotton and Corn

Soil conservation demonstrations on four Hempstead county farms, and a fertilizer test specially applied to the growing of grass at the Fruit & Truck Branch Experiment Station, were inspected Thursday morning by Craig Rosborough, project manager; Burl Thompson, associate agronomist, of the Hope Soil Conservation office; and a member of The Star staff.

Farms Visited

W. M. Davis, leased and operated by Bob Garrett, Patmos road.

J. L. Goodbar, managed by C. F. Baker, Patmos road.

O. R. Cushing, Patmos-Shover Springs road.

Roy Rogers, Shover Springs-Highway No. 4 cutoff.

Grass-fertilizer test of Fruit & Truck Branch Experiment Station, old highway No. 67.

At this season of the year the terrace-planting and strip-cropping system is in full swing. Oats are up at a good height on top of the terraces, or in the alternate rows of the strip-cropping method. Between the terraces, or between the strips of oats, is open ground, for the cash crops, cotton and corn.

The contour-cultivation system stands out clearly, each row taking care of its own water, carrying it to a carefully-arranged run-off point.

Phosphate for Grass

Because grass is the greatest preserver of top-soil, holding back the rain-water and preventing the rapid run-off that causes erosion, the inspection tour took in the Experiment Station's fertilizer test as applied to the growing of grass.

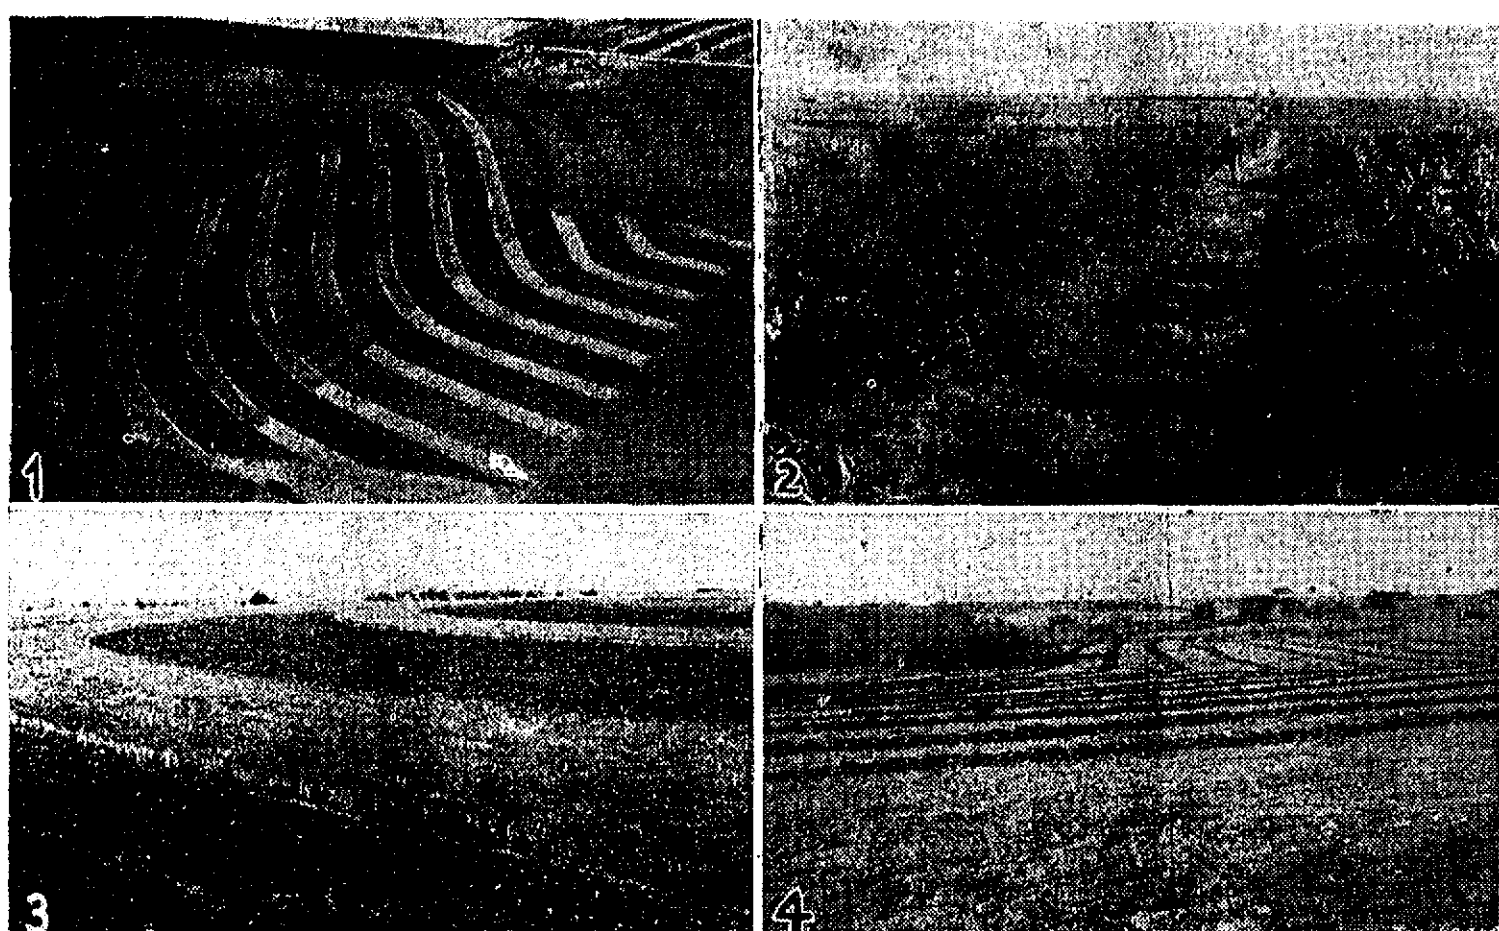

George W. Ware, assistant director in charge of the station, has two test fields of two and a half acres each. The base of both fields is bermuda grass, with included burr-clover, hop-clover, white Dutch clover, and lespedeza.

On one field the conventional nitrate of soda fertilizer is used, and the other field is fertilized with phosphate and lime—and this mineral-content fertilizer proves far superior in the production of grass. The growth is most luxuriant with the phosphate-lime combination.

Both fields are being grazed with steers. Thursday morning it was observed that although the phosphate-lime-fertilized field was grazing eight steers, against only two for the nitrate-of-soda field, the animals in the first field had already "gotten their fill" and had headed down—while the two animals in the second field were still eating hastily.

Steers in both fields are being weighed periodically by the Experiment Station for comparative gains.

Mrs. Simpson's Divorce Doubted

British Law Questions the Validity of her First Divorcement

LONDON, Eng.—(AP)—Legal doubt of the validity of Mrs. Wallis Simpson's first divorce was raised again Thursday after friends had disclosed plans that would make her the June bride of the Duke of Windsor.

A. Berriedale Keith, famous constitutional lawyer, wrote to an Edinburgh Scotsman expressing his doubt that Mrs. Simpson was properly divorced from Lieutenant-Commander E. W. Spencer, Jr., of the United States Navy, in the eyes of British law.

Kerosene-Operated Refrigerator Here

Morwood-Calmes Electro-lux Agency Opening in This City Saturday

Formal opening of the new Morwood-Calmes company, refrigeration store, 107 Front street, will be held Saturday, it was announced Thursday by Thomas O'Dwyer, local manager.

The store will feature the latest models of the kerosene-operated Electro-lux. A number of the models are now on display. The local store is a branch of the Morwood-Calmes company of Texarkana which operates stores at Texarkana, Hope and Shreveport, with headquarters at Texarkana.

Mr. O'Dwyer announced that the Hope store would employ all local help. He said he would move his family here within a few days from Texarkana.

Establishment of the branch store at Hope was made after a survey of several Arkansas towns. Possibilities here appear much more favorable than in other places, Mr. O'Dwyer said.

In speaking of the new kerosene Electro-lux, Mr. O'Dwyer said:

"Electrolux operates on ordinary kerosene (coal oil) for just a few pennies a day. One filling of the tank lasts a week or more. Owners find that savings on refrigerating cost and on food bills make Electro-lux actually pay for itself.

"Our product needs no electric current, no daily attention, no water, and gives your food the finest protection that modern science has devised."

He invited the public to visit him at the new store, 107 Front street.

Utilities Chairman 'Fires' Secretary

Miss Zella Passe Let Out by Fitzhugh on Patronage Decision

LITTLE ROCK—(AP)—Miss Zella Passe, secretary to Chairman Thomas Fitzhugh of the State Utilities Commission, said Thursday she had received notice that her services would be dispensed with effective May 1.

Fitzhugh, who notified her Wednesday she was to be dismissed, declined to comment.

Her discharge came within a few hours after Governor Bailey urged department heads to settle all patronage matters quickly.

Puzzle Fiend Gets Satisfaction, Then Returns Doc's Star

A. D. Brannon, Hope postoffice employee, "missed" his Hope Star the other afternoon.

Mr. Brannon was vexed, but withheld a complaint to the circulation department until Wednesday.

He reported that he looked "high and low" for the paper, but failed to find it.

The next morning when Mr. Brannon was looking for the paper he found the paper neatly folded, lying beside the front door in plain view.

He unfolded the paper—and to his surprise, found the cross-word puzzle had already been "worked."

Bert Johnson Is Reported Very Ill

Highland Peach Orchard King Gravely Ill at Niece's Home

Bert Johnson, Highland peach king, was reported Thursday to be seriously ill at the home of his niece, Mrs. Walter Pryor, near Nashville.

The nature of his illness was not learned here, Mr. Johnson is well known for his development of the Nashville peach district, in which he controls a large acreage.

Mr. Johnson has been ill for the past two weeks.

Italy to Reaffirm Austrian Support

Mussolini and Schuschnigg in Conference at Venice Thursday

VENICE, Italy.—(AP)—Premier Mussolini met Chancellor Kurt Schuschnigg of Austria Thursday for a conference that political circles said would lead to a strong reaffirmation of Italian support of the independence of her northern neighbor.

Well-informed sources declared that none of a number of developments since the two statesmen met last year were such as to undermine close relations between Austria and Italy.

Defense Holds Up Jury in Kentucky

The defense, however, challenged eight of the twelve men whom the commonwealth accepted, necessitating the calling of additional veniremen.

Small grains provide the best rep to seed on land in advance of perennial grass, says A. E. Aldous, Kansas State College agronomist.

Polygamy Dropped by Arizona Colony in Face of Hunger

Maintains Right to Plural Wives—But "Will Not Stress It"

SHORT CREEK, Ariz.—(AP)—Hunger has taken the fight out of this once notorious colony of polygamists.

Still maintaining the right to plural wives, Edmund Barlow, new head of the cult, says that for the time being "polygamy will not be stressed."

Barlow is more concerned at the moment with trading timber for staple food products and getting some of his huskier members on the PWA.

Hard Times Follow Boom

Publicly accompanying prosecution of two Short Creek zealots for living with more than one wife brought in a crowd of prospective converts, many of them women, last year. But with the conviction of Price Johnson and Carling Spencer, and the approach of winter, all left but 23 adults and about 70 children.

With starvation staring them in the face, the cultists demoted "Bishop" John Y. Barlow in favor of his brother Edmund.

The only known income of the colony at that time was a $20-a-month school salary paid the educator. Barlow started a shingle and lath mill. Johnson learned tanning in prison and on his release was put to work making shoes. An irrigation canal on which ten years' fruitless labor had been spent was abandoned. Pressure was put on several men to get relief jobs.

Failure Blamed On Aridity

Although the militant county attorney who launched the polygamy cleanup was defeated in the last election, Barlow decided to keep his followers out of such trouble.

"Our first job is to support the families we have," he says. "After all, polygamy is only part of our belief. Perhaps we can make converts to it later."

Rebels from the Mormon church, the Short Creek colonists hold all goods and income in common.

Principal reason for the colony's failure, say visitors, is neither communism nor polygamy but its arid climate.

Turned Brown By Brown Turner

DALLAS, Texas.—From what they're saying, we're fixin' to run in the hole about three billion dollars this year, so we may have to turn the Norris Dam over to the power companies and change the color of stamps again and charge four cents for letters in order to come out on top. Anyway, there's no use in us worrying about it a lot as our credit's still good and the turnip greens season's not over. From all reports, the G-men are sort of hard up for a new Public Enemy No. 1, but Tennessee's still holding the record for child brides.

1/2 Million May Lose Out in WPA

Reduction From 2,114,790 Workers to 1,786,000 Is Forecast

WASHINGTON.—(AP)—The Works Progress Administration reported Thursday it had 2,114,790 workers on its rolls March 27.

Officials said the rolls will have to be cut eventually if President Roosevelt's 1 1/2-billion-dollar relief appropriation recommendation goes through. Unofficial estimates fixed 1,786,000 as the maximum average which could be employed by the WPA under the 1 1/2-billion annual allotment.

Asks Damages for Slaughter Battle

Wounded in Gun Battle With Tom Slaughter; Man Asks $5,000

LITTLE ROCK.—(AP)—Attorneys Lucien Coleman and Nabors Shaver urged the state claims commission Wednesday to pay $5,000 to DeWitt Garrett of Poinsett county for injuries suffered in a 1921 gun battle when he sought to prevent the escape from the state penitentiary of Tom Slaughter, bank robber and slayer.

The commission took the petition under advisement. The attorneys said that a shotgun wound in the shoulder had caused Garrett's left arm to wither, depriving him of its use. A bill to make the $5000 payment was introduced in the 1937 legislature but never was brought up for final passage.

Slaughter's career wrote a vivid chapter in Arkansas criminal history. Sentenced to life imprisonment for the slaying of a deputy sheriff at Hot Springs, he made a break for liberty from Tucker prison farm. One trusty at the prison was killed and others, including Garrett, wounded in the ensuing gun battle.

Recaptured, Slaughter was tried for the slaying of the prison trusty and sentenced to death. His next sensational break came after his transfer to the death house in the old prison walls at Little Rock.

Obtaining a "dummy" pistol, he gained complete control of the prison, liberating all inmates of the death house and others who wished to follow him. He took five negroes, three of them condemned to death, and J. C. Howard, a convicted check forger, with him.

A few hours later Howard shot Slaughter to death in a lonely Saline county woods where they were hiding, subsequently the late Governor Thomas C. McRae granted a full pardon to Howard, who refused to accept a $500 reward offered by the governor for Slaughter's capture.

Garrett was serving a one-year term for night riding at the time he engaged the desperado in the gun battle. He was one of a score of persons convicted in connection with sharecropper-tenant trouble in Poinsett county.

Madrid's Gunfire Sends Rebels Back

Government Counter-Attack Gains Ground in Suburban Ussera

By the Associated Press

The Spanish government turned its mightiest guns upon the insurgent outposts in suburban Madrid Thursday, checking the rain of shells that has poured into the heart of the capital for 11 days.

Fighting savagely, government troops, under cover of an artillery barrage and led by hand-grenade throwers, blasted the insurgents from trenches in Ussera suburb west of the capital.

The incessant shelling of Madrid up to Thursday had rolled up a toll of more than 200 dead and 400 injured.

CHAPTER I

The annual Spring Frolic at the Green Hills Inn was in progress. Every person—young or old—who was of any social value in Green Hills was at the Inn, the men in tuxedos and spotless tails and tux, the women glamorous and luxurious in gleaming velvets and glittering metal cloths.

For Green Hills was one of the smartest suburbs within the metropolitan New York area, and the first spring dance at the Inn was unquestionably the gala event of the season.

By eleven-thirty the party was in full swing, and the stag line, fortified by just the proper number of Scotch and sodas, was performing in splendid form. The women of Green Hills were proud of them. Perhaps a little later there would be those who might weaken—some to seek rest for weary feet in the smoking room downstairs, some to fall into the gentle unconsciousness which one too many Scotch induces. But as yet the evening was unspoiled.

Hal Stewart's orchestra, imported from a three weeks' engagement on Broadway, swung into the lively strain of "A Fine Romance." The older women took heart; they preferred these fast tunes. The quick rhythm stirred their blood; it proved that they could step around just as lively as the 18-year-old girls, despite grown children at home.

Millie Sanders, frisking by in the arms of Jerry Johnston, glanced over her shoulder at Jerry's wife, Laura.

"Who's that lovely blond with Bob Andrews?" she asked Laura excitedly, slowing Jerry down so that she might catch the answer.

"Mr. Hendry's secretary, I'm told," Laura replied. "I've never seen her before."

"Isn't she lovely? Jerry, don't you think she's lovely? Look, that blond girl dancing with Bob..."

Jerry looked. He saw a slim, golden-haired girl, and even to his untrained masculine eye it seemed fitting that she should be dressed in rich black velvet, madonnas save for the gardenias at her shoulder. Her eyes were bright, clear blue, and the depth of their color contrasted vividly with the fairness of her skin. She looked to Jerry like a girl who had just stepped out of some rare old painting, too delicate for this mad whirl of dancing.

"She's a beauty, all right," he assured Millie enthusiastically. "And much as I hate to break your faithful old heart, Millie, I think I'll park you over here by the palms and cut in on her myself."

Millie laughed good-naturedly. "You're not the only one thinking that. Every eye on the stag line is following her, but Bob keeps out of the way. You haven't a chance, Jerry. Better be contented with me for a while."

Millie was right. Every time Bob Andrews approached the end of the room, where the men were gathered a dozen pair of eyes tried to catch his, a dozen hands started upward to attract

Air-Minded Youth Must Be Told Plain Facts

WE SEEM to be raising an air-minded bunch of children these days. Mingle with any group of high school or junior high school lads and you are apt to find that something like half of them are putting in their spare time making model airplanes.

With balsa wood, glue, Japanese paper, and rubber bands, these lads can turn out scale models of bombers, scout planes, commercial transports, or seaplanes—and amazingly good most of them are, too. When these youngsters grow up, we ought to have a nation that understands and likes airplanes as thoroughly as the present generation likes and understands automobiles.

This is all to the good. We live in a technical era, and the airplane represents the era's high water mark. The more we know about how such things are made and how they work, the better off we all shall be.

X X X

BUT ONE thing seems to be left out of this campaign of education, and it is a distressing lack. It is pointed up by a tale told in New York recently by a traveler who had come back from Spain.

This traveler told how a big party was held in war-torn Madrid at Christmas time for the children of that luckless city. Foreign sympathizers—Americans, Englishmen, Frenchmen, and so on—had sent in a vast collection of toys, the toys were stacked on the floor of a big public hall, and the children were ushered in and told to help themselves.

Naturally, the children had a fine time, and they descended on that big pile of toys like locusts descending on a green alfalfa field. But when they got all through—when every child had taken to his bosom all the toys he could lay hands on—there remained, in the center of the room, one pile of toys that no child had touched.

They were toy airplanes. Not one child had taken one; not one could be persuaded to want one.

You see, Madrid had been under aerial bombardment for many weeks. These children knew what airplanes could do; knew how they could drop death and destruction out of the skies, making school rooms and streets and playgrounds and homes horribly unsafe. They had seen their playmates killed by bombs dropped from the air; they had seen schools and homes wrecked; many of them had seen their own parents killed.

Is it any wonder that those children didn't look on airplanes as suitable toys?

X X X

THIS IS the one thing that is being omitted from the aeronautical education of our own youngsters. Our children know that airplanes are things of great beauty and grace; they know how they are made; they have a smattering of aeronautical theory. The one thing they don't understand is the way these triumphs of human daring and ingenuity can, by human stupidity and cruelty, be used to turn the fair earth into hell.

And they won't be fully equipped to live in the airplane age until they do understand that.

Death Abroad

ADDRESSING a conference of state health officers in Washington, D. C., Dr. Halbert L. Dunn, of the Census Bureau, made an interesting statement.

One third of all persons killed in automobile accidents, he said, are tourists who are far from home.

That such a high percentage of crash victims should die in accidents that occur in places distant from their homes seems an odd fact, and one that perhaps, might well be studied carefully. Are tourists far more liable to become involved in accidents than people who are driving in their home precincts; could this be due to ignorance of speed or traffic regulations; and, if so, would standardization of laws be of any benefit?

If it has not already been made, a survey of the reasons behind such deaths in far places might be helpful in the campaign to cut down the grim auto toll.

Tuberculosis Has Claimed More Human Lives Than Any Other Ill

(No. 194)

Since the beginning of time, tuberculosis has destroyed more human life than any other disease. Today tuberculosis is seventh in the list of causes of death in the United States, although some 80,000 people die each year from this infection.

In 1910 the mortality rate for tuberculosis of the lungs was 136 per 100,000 population; in 1932, it was 56.4. In 1910 the rate for tuberculosis that affected other parts of the body was 32.3, and, in 1932, it was 6.4.

Tuberculosis is quite definitely overshadowed as a cause of death by such conditions as diseases of the heart, which still have a rate of 209.2, and cancer, with its rate of 101.2 per 100,000 people.

Cancer and diseases of the heart, however, attack primarily human beings of advanced age, whereas tuberculosis strikes most severely at human beings during their periods of greatest usefulness. Thirty per cent of all deaths of people between 15 and 60 years of age are due to tuberculosis of the lungs.

The death rate of 56.2 per 100,000 means that between seven and eight million people now living eventually will die of tuberculosis unless something is done about it.

Fortunately for Americans, the death rate from this disease is at least as low in the United States as it is in most foreign countries, including even such countries as England and France. Such rates as those of Puerto Rico have at times been well over 300, in contrast to our 56; and those of the Philippine Islands have approximated 600 per 100,000.

Tuberculosis is a germ disease. It is not inherited. Children usually get tuberculosis through contact with some older person who has the disease, with a diseased animal, or with food products or other materials contaminated by the germ.

Sometimes the disease attacks not in childhood but later along in life. Nevertheless, a survey of modern methods of diagnosis reveals that the tendency is more and more to protect the child from tuberculosis until later period in his life.

The Approaching Crisis

Your Children

By Olive Roberts Barton

Mothers' Tears Worse to Child Than Tragedy

"To be brave for the children's sake." How many mothers have whispered this to themselves since time began.

No home goes on eternally without trouble. Sometimes it comes with a crash, again it is the slow deadly pull against adversity of many kinds.

Whatever form it takes, death, sickness, money-worries or someone's trying disposition, the mother tries not to let it affect her children too vitally.

But what a terrible strain it is, to smile and keep going, to act as if everything was smooth, and lovely with that load on her heart. It is easier to fight an enemy with arms than to wage war against this kind of thing that fights in the dark, and against which there is no defense. The real soldier, man or woman, is the one who endures and tries to keep normal at the same time. There are more heroines among mothers than ever graced a stage.

Father's Burden Lighter I say "mothers," rather than fathers, not because men escape tragedy but because they can get out, away from the family. Women must stay, and put on an act before the children, whose happiness they try to keep at a level.

The children, of course, may know about the worry. In many cases, they should, unless circumstances make the knowledge inadvisable.

This is another story, and not the point today. It is rather that most children are miserable if they think their mothers are grieving or worrying. Actual trouble or sorrow, they find less unbearable than their mama's tears, or sad eyes, or general expression of distress.

Is it any wonder, then, that the mother of a family tries with all that is in her to smile and carry on?

Perhaps, if she tries the "comparison" idea, she may find strength to look and feel happier.

Woes Can Worsen

"I thought one time that the end of everything had come when we lost the house, my husband had no work and I was ill," said a woman whom tragedy had followed. "Now I know better. We lost Joey. I know now that all those other things had not mattered so terribly."

I believe that when the burden gets too heavy, a survey of what might have been or what other people are going through will so often make our own, lot seem happier. Perhaps, then,

HOLLYWOOD

There's More to Movie Song Writing Than Meets the Ear

HOLLYWOOD.—Song-writing for the movies these days is by no means a matter of thinking up a tune, jotting it down, delivering it to the studio, and rushing away for a month's recuperation at Palm Springs.

At least, it isn't like that for the team of Louis Alter and Paul Webster, and they're typical of the new order of songsmiths as contrasted with the earlier crowd of Tin Pan Alley mugs.

Indeed, there aren't any Tin Pan Alley mugs left in these parts, except Irving Berlin. And Berlin, explains Alter, became the greatest of all creative song writers because he helped plan the productions in which his music was used. "Why, lots of times he'll create an entire scene before he writes a note."

That's the important difference—song writers now are part of the picture business, and not mere contributors. The Messrs. Alter and Webster study miniature sets before they get to work.

They confer with producers, directors, dance directors, and costume designers. They help with rehearsals, orchestration, filming and recording. Their work isn't done until a picture is finished. As a result, they don't have much time for Palm Springs, but still they have a lot of fun.

Quick Change Just now they're working on two pictures at once. One is the new Bobby Brown feature, "Make a Wish"; the other is Walter Wanger's "Vogues of 1938." Which just goes to show how much emotional control must be exercised today by composers and lyricists.

They'll spend a few hours at United Artists pepping up a torrid swing carnival called "Turn On the Heat," in which a chorus of negro girls writhe over a glass floor through which colored lights contribute to the effect of a jazz inferno.

Then they'll skip out to Sol Lesser's studio where innocent little Bobby Brown is caroling ditties of sweetness and light. There can be no monkey-business about getting into the new mood; they just have to hurl themselves into it.

Musie Notes

"The best music is written under pressure," said Composer Alter, who studied at the New England Conservatory and expected to be a concert pianist.

"The best lyrics, too," added Webster, a New York University alum who writes serious poetry and paints. "Of course," continued Alter, "there is such a thing as genuine inspiration. My 'Manhattan Serenade' perhaps was the best thing I ever did. It was written in 1928 at the height of the jazz era, and it expressed something that tumbled out in two hours. But 'Metropolitan Nocturne' didn't write itself.

We can smile for the children, and be a bit gay. Yes, not all unhappiness is hopeless. Much of it is not really tragedy at all. We must try to govern our own thoughts and hearts, and then not only the children will benefit, but ourselves as well.

I worked three years on that. "There's no use talking about speed records in composing. All song writers sooner or later turn out a hit number in five minutes. Those are called 'naturals'; they emerge so fast they scare you. You think it isn't possible that they can be any good, yet they're generally best-sellers.

Yet when you're working on a picture, and have to suit the music to the action and get some essential part of the plot into the lyrics, you may dig for weeks before you get a few lines just right."

Alter, who is blond and cheerful, but jittery, composed five numbers in the season of 1936-37, each of them a No. 1 hit tune on the air. They were "Melody From the Sky," "Twilight on the Trail," "You Turned the Tables on Me," "Rainbow on the River," and "A Thousand Dreams of You."

The last-named two were written with his new partner, the tall, dark and dreamy Webster, whose biggest hit as a lyricist previously, was "Two Cigarettes in the Dark."

The team has song credits in seven movies, but in "Make a Wish" they'll split the honors with the famed and venerable Oscar Straus. The latter was brought to America by Producer Lesser to compose tunes for the Bobby Brown picture, but Straus is the first to admit that he doesn't know much about our type of popular music. And some of the songs must be "popular."

For years the Viennese composer was an idol of Alter. Now Alter finds himself a collaborator of the old master, giving him tips on modern music.

A Book a Day

Little Shut-In, Gardeners Will Relish Latest Books

Periodically, Bruce Catton's A-Book-A-Day column is given over to Olive Roberts Barton, famed child training authority, for a review of the latest and best books for children. Here is another of her authoritative articles.

By OLIVE ROBERTS BARTON Spring books offer children, lovely volumes about everything under the sun, are flowering along with the cherry blossoms. The first showery Saturday, hand your young shut-in a pencil and "It's All About Me," something new in memory books by Mary D. Chase (Oxford: 75c). Here, in one small neat binding, is a combination drawing book, play book, hobby book, diary, or what will you. Incidentally, it is excellent from the viewpoint of self-expression and initiative-development.

An all-family book that will be treasured and quoted by every member is "Jonathan Bing and Other Verses," by Beatrice Curtis Brown (Oxford: 75c). These delightful nonsense rhymes about ants, kings, and merry old "Jonathan" himself are certain to grip the imagination.

Among the recent instructive books for children over 10, is "The Book of Animal Life," by Thora Stowell and Thornton W. Burgess (Little, Brown: $2.50). This full-bodied volume is a comprehensive study of little-known secrets of nature; the reasons for differences in habits, size, coloring, covering, and structure; and the slow process that has made each species what it is.

Here are the answers to cat and dog enmity, why certain animals understand one another, the puzzle of the dinosaur's fate, and so on. Boys will be especially interested. The book is well-aimed at appreciation and conservation of wild life.

With his next Indian suit, give your boy a copy of "Dancing Cloud," by Mary and Conrad Buff (Viking: 45c) if he would know how real Indian boys are living in the Arizona desert today. This beautiful child's book relates the daily life of Dancing Cloud, his best friend, Swift Boy, his sister and mother and father, all modern Navajo Indians.

The children tend their sheep, weave rugs, ride over the buttes, hunt eagles, and find turquoise in an excavation interesting, if not so exciting, as that of war-whoop tradition. The authors lived among the Navajos to collect material for the true-to-life text. The lithographs are vivid and as colorful as the West they represent.

A sequel to "The Gardener's First Year," by Alfred Bates, comes out "The Gardener's Second Year" (Longmans: $2), in which the more advanced planter, young or old, will learn about perennials and bulbs, and further steps of flower raising. I bring the first to mind again, and add this second volume, as this is the time to breed and plan for summer and fall blooms.

LONDON.—(AP)—The public will have a chance to see Westminster Abbey by its coronation decorations. Officials will leave the settings in place for several weeks. The coronation fittings will be on view. Officials frankly explained that one reason for keeping the abbey open was to collect admission fees.

An Old Fashioned Garden

There's a garden of dreams, where the crepe myrtle swings,
And the roses are white in the gloom-ing.
Where the hush of old beauty lies heavy and sweet,
Scented stirred by the winds that are roaming.
There a tiny swing hangs from a garled old tree,
There the larkspur's blue-petaled
glory;
There the gray fling stones lead through a way that is dim.
Like a thread to the heart of a story,
There time holds its breath, there shrubs grow to trees,
There beauty grows old in its questing,
And the garden dreams on in its fragrance-hung calm,
Where even the shadows are resting.

Speaking of gardens, and the many beautiful flowers growing there in, it seems that our town just duffs off equally as lovely, we have had the cheer of the jupons, followed by the lovely daffodils, that seemed the very essence of God's sunshine, then the pure and dainty beauty of the different kinds of spirea and narcissus, later the colorful pansies, the lilacs, and the blue, blue violets, and at this time, the stately tulips and graceful verbena seem to be holding sway.

Labor Decision Big News to Him

His face wreathed in a smile of victory, Morris Watson, central
case against the Wagner Labor

a most interesting talk on the Timber of Arkansas and its Uses, disclosing the fact that different kinds of timber found in the state were used for a number of things, for which there had as yet, been found no substitute, stressing the importance of conserving this particular product. Following the program, the hostesses assisted by Mrs.
Joe Jones and Mrs. Gus Haynes served a delightful ice course with cake. Appreciated guests for the meeting were

Bankers Ask for Balanced Budget

Would' Avoid Inflation
Economic Commission
at Spa Reports

HOOT SPRINGS, Ark.—(AP)—The economic policy commission of the American Bankers Association told its executive council Wednesday that the most effective way to avoid an inflationary boom would be to balance the federal budget.

"If that were done the other measures needed would be greatly simplified," the report stated. "If it is not done no other measures can be adequate."

The commission, reporting that American business was entering the prosperity phase of the recovery movement, said:

"There is no present evidence that there is now or has been recently any inflationary expansion of bank credit.
Neither does there appear to be any prospect of such developments in the future."

The report was made public after having been read to the council in executive session. Leonard P. Ayres, vice president of the Cleveland Trust company, is chairman of the economics policy commission.

"American business is moving ahead so vigorously," said the report, "that fears are being expressed in official circles and by economic writers that boom conditions may be impending, and that inflationary prices may develop."

It's Spring

By Helen Welshimer

IT'S spring, and I've lost the old desire
For a gipsy parterre;
I who once hunted dark green stars
To pack in a silver can.
It's spring and the gipsy violins
Are playing the whole night through,
And the wind is sweet with rivers of rain,
And I wait, I wait for you!

I've spread the table with yellow cloth;
All the daffodils I could pick
Are standing around in copper bowls,
I've lighted a candle-stick.
Darling, darling, the wanderlust
Has galloped across the hill.
I'll settle down in any town.
Oh, love me still!

Clark Gable Hides

vain for the screen lover to appear Wednesday at the trial of Mrs. Violet Wells Norton, buxom British woman charged with mail fraud conspiracy by attempting to link Gable with her admittedly illicit romance.

Defense attorneys contend she honestly mistook Gable for a "Frank Billings," the father of her daughter, Gwendoline.

Wednesday the screen hero took the stand as a prosecution witness and said "no" when lawyers asked him if he were a father, if he knew Mrs.
Norton, and if he had ever been in England where her romance took place.

But defense attorneys asked him to come back Wednesday.

So the actor returned. But he did not attend the session. He sat in an attorney's outer office reading law books. Nor did he leave for luncheon.
Sandwiches and a bottle of milk were brought in to him.

Two more of Mrs. Norton's many letters were introduced. A prolific writer, witnesses said she composed 20 letters to Gable and numerous others to movie magazines and movie commentators.

One of those read Wednesday was addressed to Actress Mae West. It did not reach her, her press agent Terry
De Lopp, testified as he identified it.

In the letter, Mrs. Norton told Miss West that she knew the actress had no husband, but felt sure she "would understand the problems of a deserted wife and mother."

It related the story of her relations with the man she knew as Frank Billings and believed to be Clark Gable.

It said she was living with James Norton in Essex, England, in 1922. Billings lived on an adjoining farm. One night he hid under the Norton house, heard a domestic quarrel and discovered that they were not married.

Then the letter said, Billings locked
Mrs. Norton in his cottage and there their illicit romance began. Not until 1925, the letter stated, did she marry
Norton.

Fort Smith Inmate in Escape From Hospital

LITTLE ROCK—(AP)—Joe Youchev, 24, listed as "dangerous," escaped from the state hospital for nervous diseases here Wednesday.

Youchev was committed from Fort Smith several months ago. He and several other patients, under guard, were carrying laundry from their ward when Youchev fled.

The patient weighed 190 pounds, was five feet, 10 inches tall, had dark hair and was dressed in white trousers and a tan shirt.

Negro "Messiah" Suddenly Missing

Faithful Mary Also Vanishes, Leaving Angry "Angels" Behind

NEW YORK—(AP)—Father Major J. Divine, the little negro "Messiah" who descended on Harlem in a cloud of smoke—so say his followers—appeared Wednesday night to have vanished in even less than that.

Behind him he left:

A group of somewhat belligerent "angels" who chanted "peace, it's wonderful" to no one in particular and "scram" to everyone who ventured to inquire about reports of discord in the West 115th street heaven.

Also a group of mere mortals wearing police badges who wanted to question the missing "Messiah" about a stabbing affray in his main kingdom Tuesday morning.

His terrestrial attorney, Arthur A. Madison, expressed the opinion that the father was off communing with the spirits somewhere in one of his branch heavens.

"I won't tell you anything that amounts to anything," said the attorney, "and what don't amount to anything I will tell you."

Madison declared the man he calls "God" had nothing to do with the fracas that began when a process server attempted to hand him a summons in a civil action in front of a crowd of his followers.

The process server, Paul Camora, was booed downstairs and one of his companions, Harry Green, was stabbed and beaten so severely that hospital attendants gave him only an even chance of recovering.

Police sent out an eight-stage alarm for the arrest of "George Baker, alias Father Divine" on a charge of acting in concert with three negroes who were taken into custody after the melee.

There were reports of discord between Father Divine and faithful Mary, the buxom woman who always appeared at his side in public.

The New York Telegram said faithful Mary had left the Harlem kingdom as a result of a dispute over money matters and had gone to her own "Peace" hotel at High Falls, near Kingston, N. Y.

The newspaper quoted her as saying over the telephone:

"He's no God. He's just a damned man."

Vallee Convicted Assault, Battery

Radio Crooner's Trial Is Heard Before Packed House

BOSTON—(AP)—A "packed house" male fans predominating—Wednesday heard Rudy Vallee, orchestra leader and crooner, convicted of assault and battery on a Boston newspaperman.

They heard Judge Daniel J. Gillen order the case placed "on file" and explain it would mean Vallee would have no record in the eyes of police.

Just once did the radio crooner utter the sparkling of women spectators with his broad smile, that when he departed to join his father in an auto-room.

The orchestra leader drew ripples of laughter from his "audience" several times. He shouted once from the witness stand. That was when he denied he had called Benedict Fitzgerald, Boston News photographer, a name "reflecting on the Irish race," and explained he was of Irish extraction himself.

Fitzgerald had hailed Vallee into court, contending the crooner "struck him after he had 'snapped' the orchestra leader, and was companion, and Evelyn Crestman, New York show girl, as the trio recently left a Boston theater.

AFRAID TO LOVE

He saw a slim, golden-haired girl. . . . She looked like a girl who had just stepped out of some rare old painting, too delicate for this mad whirl of dancing.

his attention. But each time, he adroitly changed his course.

After his tenth failure to cut in, Jimmy MacArthur looked disgusted.

"What's the matter with Andrews tonight?" he asked Philip Hendry, standing alongside of him. "Is he afraid we'll eat her?"

Philip shrugged carelessly. "It's plain to see," he remarked, with a touch of superiority, "that he begrudges you the lady's company."

"Can't say I blame him," Jimmy admitted. "Who is she, Phil?"

"My uncle's secretary, Joan Barrett."

"Joan Barrett, eh? Does she live here in Green Hills?"

"No. In town." He smiled provocingly. "And you won't find her listed in the phone book."

PHILIP edged away from the group, a little amused at this excitement Miss Barrett was causing. For his own part he cared little for girls of the fragile blond type. Give him a warm red-head any day, or a dashing black-eyed Susan like his sister Sybil. . . . Where was Sybil tonight, anyway? She'd give him the devil if he didn't put in an appearance. His eyes strayed over the other couples on the floor.

Presently he saw her coming toward him, dancing with Jim Neil. Philip smiled approvingly as he watched her. His sister, he told himself, was certainly the finest looking woman in Green Hills. Tonight, in a gorgeous gown of metal cloth which emphasized every line of her tall, slim body, she was smart, sophisticated, delicately arrogant.

For the moment she seemed unusually gay. Her white teeth, strong and brilliant against the deep carmine of her lips, flashed constantly as she chatted with her partner. Her dark eyes roved provocingly over the dancers, yet Philip noticed they carefully avoided the stag line, as if she were afraid their challenge might go unanswered.

At any other time, Sybil Hendry would have been the undisputed focus of every male eye; tonight she was feeling the new competition which her uncle's secretary was offering. She was feeling it, and despite her sparkling gaiety, she was not enjoying it. For more than one reason. . . .

Philip, quick to understand his sister's moods, saw beyond the quick flash of her smile, the cool abandon of her dancing. He saw the smoldering fire in her blue-black eyes, the tense poise of her dark head, the tiny pulse which beat spasmodically in her white throat whenever she struggled to hold her feelings in control.

HE waited until Jim Neil came abreast of him again, then he stepped forward and tapped him on the shoulder. With a casual "Hello, Phil," Neil surrendered his sister's steps out into the center of the floor without speaking. With light mockery in his tone, he sang softly the words of the orchestra's selection:

"A fine romance, with no kisses—
A fine romance, I think this is . . ."

"Keep still!" Sybil snapped, abruptly.

Her brother laughed.

"Nice of me, wasn't it, to give you a chance to be yourself?"

He whirled her past Bob Andrews and Joan Barrett, smiling graciously at Joan as he did so.

"If you have to be jealous, Syb," he murmured, "why must you look the part, for every cat in Green Hills to find it out?"

"That little upstart!" she whispered through clenched teeth. "I don't see why Bob hasn't better taste than to bring the office help out here."

"I'm afraid it goes deeper than that, Sybil," Philip said, not unkindly.

He felt her arm, resting lightly on his, go tense.

"It can't!" she said defiantly. "I won't let it!"

Philip said nothing. He felt a little sorry for Sybil. He knew, as no one else had ever guessed, how desperately—and how futilely—she had loved Bob ever since that first evening, five years before, when their uncle had brought the young man home to dinner. "The best bond salesman the company ever had," Uncle John told them then; now, five years later, Bob Andrews was a junior partner, with every prospect of heading the Hendry organization eventually.

He was as striking in appearance as Sybil; he had the same dark, blue-black hair, the same straight classic features, the same flashing smile. But there the likeness ended. Where Sybil's eyes were mysteriously cold, no matter how gayly she smiled, Bob's were warm and twinkling. Where she was superficially gay and charming and calculating, with a quick smile to serve her purpose, he was naturally and sincerely friendly, with as hearty a grin for the bootblack who shined his shoes as he had for his wealthiest customer.

For five long years, Sybil had loved him. Because of his association with her uncle, they were constant companions; he was a thoughtful and attentive escort. Yet, despite every effort she had put forth to deepen their relationship, he was still as unattainable, as impersonal, as he had been on the occasion of their first meeting. He was the one thing in life which she craved above all else; his love was the only thing of which she had never been deprived.

And now, it seemed, he was ready to throw it away on some designing, doll-faced stenographer.

JOHN HENDRY, mining investment head.
JOHN ANDREWS, Hendry's junior partner and Joan's fiance.

DOROTHY STARKER, Joan's childhood friend.
CHARLES VORTON, California mining promoter.

Yesterday, Sybil reveals her jealousy of Joan and her fear that Bob will marry this "dazzling doll-faced stenographer."

CHAPTER II
THE boys in the orchestra picked up their tiny megaphones and harmonized the chorus of their song. Lights, for the moment, were seductively dimmed. The wildly spirited tone of the music gradually became tender. Unconsciously, the younger dancers pressed their cheeks a little closer; the older men tightened their hold about matronly waists. Bob Andrews, skirting the edge of the floor, maneuvered his partner through an arched doorway onto a quiet side porch.

"There!" he said with satisfaction. "It's good to get out of that din . . ."

"The music is perfect, Bob," Joan corrected.

"Maybe so. But I was crazy to bring you here tonight."

His eyes worshiped the clear-cut profile of her face, the proud lift of her chin, and his heart quickened to this chance of being alone.

Joan raised her eyebrows in mild surprise. "Why?" she asked, smiling up at him. "Don't your neighbors like me?"

"Like you!" They walked over to the porch railing. Below them on the terrace, the evergreens, festooned with gay red and green and yellow lanterns, gleamed brightly, and the reflection of the lights lent a glow of colorful enchantment to the porch.

"Like you!" Bob repeated, linking her arm more tightly in his. "Every man in the place is ready to eat me alive for keeping you to myself this way."

Still looking down at her, he caught the beauty of that moment mirrored in her wide blue eyes.

"Joan, darling," he said with infinite tenderness, "do you know that you're the loveliest girl in all the world?"

"No. But I know that I'm the happiest—tonight." She smiled wistfully.

"Won't you share it, my dear?"

Joan dropped her eyes under his intense gaze.

"I could be the happiest man in the world tonight," he went on. "You could make me Joan."

When she did look up, there were tears glistening on her eyelashes.

"Bob, my dear! It's so impossible—so utterly—"

"Impossible to love me?"

SHE started, and, for one brief instant, he read the answer in her eyes. Then his arms were about her, his lips seeking hers. At first she struggled against him, then slowly, in resignation to a force stronger than her will, she gave herself up to the full ecstasy of his embrace.

Inside, the music struck a livelier note; the dancing became more spirited; voices were raised in a babbling confusion. But here on the tiny porch, there were only two people in all the world; two who had just discovered the answer to the everlasting mystery of life.

After a moment, he released her. She drew back, frightened at herself, and caught her breath sharply. Her eyes, as she looked up at him, were wide and fearful.

"You do love me, Joan. Don't try to deny it."

"Oh, Bob, please listen to me. I can't love you. I mustn't. Won't you understand? I couldn't ever make you happy . . ."

He shook his head, contradicting her words. He smiled joyfully down at her.

"You have made me happy, my darling. I'm the happiest man in the world, as I told you I would be. I'm going to marry you, Joan. Do you hear me? I'm not asking you to marry me. I've done that too often. I'm telling you, now. I'm going to marry you."

The music stopped abruptly. For a brief second there was a breath-

"Bob—" She stopped abruptly, looking over his shoulder toward the doorway. Following her glance, he turned around. Sybil Hendry stood behind them, and her eyes were cold as Arctic ice.

"Hello, Sybil," Bob greeted cordially.

As Sybil looked at him, her lips were smiling, and she forced a bright gaiety into her voice. "Am I intruding?" she asked.

She came forward, extending both hands to Bob. Her eyes were in the shadows, so that he could not read the fierce anguish hidden in their depths.

"Of course not, Sybil," Bob returned exuberantly. "And listen, you shall be the first to hear that Joan is going to marry me. Wish us luck, Sybil!"

"MARRY you?" She choked over the words, and her hand flew nervously to her throat. Quickly, however, she recovered herself. "Bob!" she exclaimed, and her tone was gay to the point of hysteria. "I'm simply overwhelmed with surprise!"

She did not wish him luck, she did not look at Joan. But Joan, too frightened and confused herself at Bob's irrevocable announcement, did not notice the omission.

"I must tell your uncle, Sybil," Bob rushed on. "Know where he is?"

"No. No, I don't. Probably down at the bar . . ."

"We'll find him. Come along, Joan, I'm telling everybody before you try to back out."

Inside, the orchestra began "Auld Lang Syne," and the dancers were forming themselves into an enormous circle to sing the refrain. Merry voices called out cheery greetings to special acquaintances, and friendly hands reached out to draw elusive strangers into the swirling circle. Sybil watched Bob weave his way in and out among them, his arms held protectingly around the girl he had chosen in preference to her. She saw the glad light in his eyes as he refused to be drawn into the circle—the glad light which she had never been able to arouse.

It seemed as if all the world had suddenly stopped—as if the end of life had come as well. She was so cold that she shook like a leaf in the wind; yet in her brain a white-hot fire was raging—a fire of anger and jealousy and bitter hatred.

And through the mad flames that were her thoughts, one sentence rang out, loud and true and unforgettable:

"There's something in my life that I would rather die than have you find out, because if you did, you would hate me."

Suddenly her white teeth flashed and she began to laugh, quietly at first, then so increasingly loud that those inside who heard her were a little startled, (To Be Continued)

Flea-Catcher Is Carried Up Sleeve

Chinese Use Novel Invention to Rid Selves of Personal Pest

CHENG TU, Szechuen Province, China.—(AP)—There are no fleas on the natives of Szechuen province. An invention, designed to put the pests "on the spot," has proven so efficacious here that it is being introduced all over the country.

The flea catcher is composed of a bamboo stick covered with a sticky substance, such as honey, molasses or glue. Ten centimeter sticks in the middle of the cage and prevents it from falling out. When the fleas, attracted by the smell of the stuff covering the stick, jump on it, they are caught like flies on fly paper. The cage prevents the sticky substance from touching bedding or clothing.

In two sizes, the larger flea catcher is used in bed, under the bedding and next to the sleeper. The smaller size, about a foot long, can be tucked up one's sleeve and worn all day.

Yankee Holdout Is Ready to Sign

"Red" Ruffing, Pitcher, Would Work for $15,500, He Asserts

CHICAGO—(AP)—Charles (Red) Ruffing, the big right-hander who won 20 games for the New York Yankees last season, said Wednesday night he was ready to call off his pinch-hitting campaign if owner Jacob Ruppert would give him $15,500 for 1937. Most persistent of the important holdouts, Ruffing had insisted on $16,000.

Ruffing, who had held out for a contract calling for $15,000 for pitching and $1000 for his pinch-hitting ability, wasted no words when asked if he was willing to split the $1000 with the Yankees.

"I'll sign for $15,500," he snapped, "and I'm ready to leave Thursday. Haven't talked with a representative of the club for quite a while, but if they say $15,500, I'll accept."

The PAYOFF

By RICHARD McCANN
NEA Service Sports Writer

Connie Mack, fatherly, kindly, apologetic in his orders; Rogers Hornsby, stern, biting, arbitrary. Bill Terry, cool insolent; Mickey Cochrane, excitable—as jittery as the morning after.

It takes all types, this business of managing a ball club. One man will whip a team home, another will whoop it in. One will curse and swear, another will cajole, another will soothe. Some will fight, some will negotiate, some will wait for a champion, and still another will laugh his club down the home stretch.

Take the 16 major league pilots who have led their teams into the new-born 1937 season.

Connie Mack is the most distinctive of them all, if for no other reason than that he has been managing baseball teams for 43 years. The years have nattered Mr. Mack. Scholarly, gentle, soft-spoken, the old gentleman never barks out a command. He never tells a player to do something. He always asks him. "Oh, say, there, Kelley," Mr. Mack will say on the bench of an afternoon, "would you please go out to the bull pen and warm up? Easter may be needing some help out there soon."

Mack Inspires Respect
Mr. Mack (that's how all of them address him) gets results from his players through respect, not fear. His players love him as a father, and he doesn't like to quarrel with them, or to make over his head.

For instance, when Waite Hoyt was released by the New York Yankees and picked up by the Athletics he rejected the Philadelphia contract. "I don't," said Hoyt, "think you are offering me what I am worth. I could get more on any other team."

Hoyt had a reply in two days. "We are giving you your outright release," wrote Mr. Mack, "so that you will be able to get what you are worth."

Hornsby is the direct opposite of Mr. Mack. Hornsby is the hell-for-leather leader. He's the boss and if you don't like it, well, stand up and try to do something about it.

Under the threat of fines—and, now and then, fists—Hornsby positively forbids his St. Louis Browns to smoke, or gurgie soft drinks, or gobble up sandwiches in the clubhouse before or after a game.

Nor can they read newspapers and talk about anything else but baseball—none of this idle chatter about "what happened in the fifth at Pimlico," or "did you see how Sarazen sank them putts?"

"There's here to play baseball," Mr. Hornsby's rather sound reasoning, "and they can't do it if their minds are on something else. I not only want 'em to play, I want 'em to talk, sleep, eat baseball."

Hornsby has done wonders with his system, so has Mack.

Terry Distills Whoop-de-do
There's Bill Terry, a cold, business-like as a banker. He doesn't want whoop-de-do on or off the ball field. He wants nine-o'clock and matter-of-fact ball players.

Color and showmanship don't show up in the batting averages, and so he doesn't want any part of it. "Shut up, out there, and play ball," he once shouted at Dick Bartell, his shortstop.

Charley Dresser, however, says get out there and fight, pep it up, shout, whoop and holler and jump around—scare 'em, if you can't beat 'em any other way.

Jimmy Dykes is blunt; Bucky Harris is a diplomat. Dykes tells the boys just what he thinks about them; Harris hints at it, handling every player differently to suit the temperament.

Joe McCarthy is quiet, aloof; Charley Grimm is gay, palmy-wahey with his players.

Burleigh Grimes is an umpire-baiter. He's been thrown out of more parks than One-Eye Connolly. Bill McKechnie, on the other hand, is almost priestly in his dignity and reserve.

Pie Traynor is folgety, flustery; Joe Cronin and Mickey Cochrane are fidgety but always have their wits about them. Both are furious fighters who hate defeat. Both, however, have one bad fault—they play favorites. Or maybe both have changed now—Cochrane has sold Al Simmons, his Philadelphia pal, and Cronin last fall consented to the release of Al Schoach, Heinie Manush, and Jack Russell, three comrades of his Washington days.

Frankie Frisch is hot with worry inside, but calm and rather cold outside. Jimmy Wilson is one of the most regular fellows. He can take a joke. Maybe that's why he took the Phillies job.

Have we got 'em all? Oh, yes, we clean forgot Steve O'Neill. But, then, knowing how Cleveland is with managers, likable old Steve's liable not to be there by the time this ink is dry.

Bossy Mayor Is Again "on Loose"
Andrew J. Gillis Forgets Promise of Peace to Village Council

By ALEXANDER H. SINGLETON
NEWBURYPORT, Mass.—(AP)—Andrew J. (Bossy) Gillis, this old fishing port's "bad boy" mayor, has shaken off the shackles of "Mr. Gillis's advice and his own campaign promises" to keep his mouth shut this term.

Bossy sighs with relief these days as Newburyport echoes to the roar of his new-found freedom.

All the "Council's Fault"
"If those loony ingrates, those ungrateful bums, the city councilmen," asserts Bossy, "had behaved and didn't oppose me, I could've kept quiet."

"But I gotta fight. The councilmen have declared war." Bossy figuratively mounted his war horse—his steel of the moment was an up-ended oil barrel in his garage where pumps gas for townfolk and tourists—and explained the controversy between the council and himself.

"The government," said Bossy, "will kick through with more than $100,000 to build an airport in Newburyport if the city will provide the land. But the council won't appropriate the money for it."

"Why? I'll tell you why. Just because Bossy Gillis is for it. He's not hungry."

"Now here's a hundred war veterans down at city hall looking for work. Some of 'em has as high as 10 kids. They need food and could get work if this airport project went through."

"Bossy Gillis ain't going hungry," shouted the red-headed mayor, "but he don't like to see his old buddies and their kids starving."

Bossy proved his point about his personal diet by outlining four meals he had already enjoyed by mid-afternoon, and the fifth he looked forward to on reaching home, with perhaps a "snack" before bed.

Browns Outslug White Sox to Win

Manager Hornsby, With Homer, Leads Team to 15 to 10 Victory

ST. LOUIS—(AP)—There were 39 hits in the slugfest which the St. Louis Browns won from the Chicago White Sox, 15 to 10, to open the American League baseball season here Wednesday, but Rogers Hornsby's home run led all the rest.

Hornsby, nearly 41 and back in active duty at second base after a lay-off last season, hit a home run into the center field bleachers back of the flag pole—430 feet from home plate. It started the Browns off on their seven-run fifth inning which drove the White Sox ace pitcher Vernon Kennedy, to the showers.

A crowd slightly in excess of 8,000—about half that expected for the season opener which was postponed from Tuesday because of rain—saw the Browns win their first season-inaugural game since 1931. President William Harbridge of the American League was present.

Harold Clift, St. Louis third baseman, who got five hits for a perfect day at bat, drove a home run into the left field stands right after Hornsby's circuit blow.

Ort Lillebrand, right-hand pitcher obtained from Cleveland in a winter trade in a rebuilding campaign which may make St. Louis a factor in the 1937 pennant race, was found for 17 hits but pitched the entire game.

The White Sox attack proved most effective in the eighth inning when six runs were scored. Zeke Bonura made four hits in five times at bat and George Rensen, who relieved Luke Sewell as catcher, got two hits in two times up.

Canuck Wins Hub Marathon

This looks more like the start than the finish of a gruelling marathon as Walter Young, 24, of Verdun, Quebec, pounds home the winner in the Boston A. A.'s 40th annual Patriots' Day run. Young covered the tortuous route of 26 miles, 385 yards from Hopkinton to Boston's Back Bay in 2 hours 33 minutes and 20 seconds.

Ontario Premier Independent Soul

Hepburn Elected by Farmers and Opponents of "Big Business"

By HAROLD FAIR
Canadian Press Staff Writer
(Written For The AP Feature Service)

Ontario's chubby premier, Mitchell Frederick (Mitch) Hepburn, who has taken the spotlight in the CIO drive in Canada by declaring open warfare on "foreign labor agitators," is an energetic man addicted to wearing double-breasted suits.

Slightly bald at the back, he has a double chin and an infectious grin that is famous all over the province. He is married, 40 years old, and has two adopted children, Peter and Patricia, who live on the big Hepburn onion farm near St. Thomas, north of Lake Erie.

Cleans Out Office Holders
Famous for the phrase "the man on the back concession" (referring to the farmer) he went into office in July, 1934, two years after his idol, President Roosevelt, and pledged his government to a policy of economy to aid the dirt farmers.

Whole-sale dismissals of civil servants—described by opponents as wielding the Hepburn axe—featured his plan to cut costs of government. He abolished or reduced many boards. For instance the three-man liquor control board was reduced to one. Another part of his campaign was far cheaper interest rates.

Likes Rough Battle
Fearless, he will tackle anything and comment on opponents with vitriol, rare in a land where politics is a kid-glove affair. Some of his bitterest shafts were directed at Canadian's former Premier R. B. Bennett.

Hepburn resigned his membership in the house of commons to take active leadership of his party in the 1934 provincial elections. He enjoys a rough and tumble battle. By many, he is blamed for the bitterness of Ontario legislative debates.

A former bank clerk, he was educated in high school and later took a correspondence course. He cannot be described exactly as a labor man. But his government brought down the industrial standards act providing codes for various trades.

Hits "Big Interests," Too
Generally, he has sought legislation without special thought for any one group.

The "big interests," however have been a target for him. His government passed legislation cancelling hydro-electric power purchases from private Quebec firms because he contended the deals were made at too high a price.

Hepburn was accused of betraying Ontario's credit through this policy of "repudiation." He since has made new contracts with all but one of the companies.

Economically, his two chief beliefs have been freer trade and lower interest rates. He approved wholeheartedly of the United States-Canada trade treaty and boasts of the success of his government in cheapening money.

The length of the Great Wall of China, including all spurs and loops, is estimated at 2,500 miles.

Reds Anticipate Fights This Year, Hire Battler

CINCINNATI—(NEA)—Charley Dressen's scrappy Cincinnati Reds, who flashed spikes, roughed basemen and got into a lot of wordy arguments with threatening opponents in exhibition games, aren't taking any chances of getting into brawls on and off the field this year.

They've got August Britain on their side now. August, a catcher, is a six-footer weighing 195 pounds with a reputation of being quite a battler with Fort Worth of the Texas League.

Guaranteed Annual Wage Is CIO Goal

HOUSTON, Texas.—(AP)—An old idea, new in modern labor movements, is the proposal for minimum wage scale on an annual basis which the Committee for Industrial Organization hopes to include in agreements it is seeking with the oil companies.

Although CIO representatives admit the socialist party of many years ago advocated an annual basis for earnings, they are quick to assert that the idea they advocate came not from the socialists but from "conditions in modern mass production."

H. C. Fremming, who is leading the CIO drive, says the proposal will be a major topic of discussion in all conferences. Its purpose, he says, is to gain for workmen a guaranteed annual income so their living standards can be maintained at a steady level throughout the year, regardless of the type and amount of work involved.

The plan would eliminate hourly, daily, weekly and monthly scales and "prevent so much fluctuation in the income of thousands of workers."

Other objectives of the campaign are to recruit 1,000,000 union members and establish the "philosophy of collective bargaining" in the $12,000,000,000 "black gold" business.

The Mississippi river forms the entire eastern boundary line of Missouri for 500 miles.

Pastures Built Up on Steepest Land

M. & A. Railway Co-operating With U. S. Near Harrison, Ark.

HARRISON, Ark.—Private industry has joined forces with farmers co-operating with the Soil Conservation Service in the Crooked Creek project area near here, according to W. O. Melton, project manager.

A scarcity of Bermuda grass, which is needed in this area for sodding new pastures, resulted in an offer from L. A. Watkins, vice president of the M. & A. Railway to transport large quantities of soil from other sections of the state free of charge. As a result of this offer approximately 350 sacks of soil were freighted in by the railroad from the Soil Conservation Service camp at Heber Springs. Additional soil will be brought in as needed.

Approximately 4,000 acres of land, much of it retired from cultivation because of steepness of slope, are being built into improved permanent pastures in the project area. Mr. Melton stated. The heavy vegetative covering, which the Bermuda grass will make possible, will not only protect this land from further erosion, but will also be the means of building up pastures on the lands of co-operating farmers. Mr. Melton stated.

"This phase of the co-ordinated erosion control program also means bringing into valuable use some 4,000 acres of land from which farmers are now receiving little or no return," Mr. Melton said.

Sergeant L. L. Aldridge, Little Rock representative of the United States army organized reserves, said Wednesday a full battalion of the 80th field artillery (motorized), Fort Des Moines, Ia., would arrive at the camp here next week as a part of regular spring maneuvers. The troops, approximately 400 officers and men, will remain "about two weeks," he said.

Records at Arkansas national guard headquarters showed the encampment next week would be the first regular army troops since 1923, when final detachments of the third division were transferred.

THE jumper frock (No. 8615) is a favorite with young girls because it is as many frocks as they have blouses. There is a choice of either short or long sleeves. Good in percale, gingham, seersucker or sheer wool for the jumper, and lawn, batiste or dotted swiss for the blouse. Patterns are sized 4 to 10 years. Size 8 requires 1-3/4 yards of 32 inch fabric for the jumper, and 1-1/4 yards for the blouse with long sleeves. Short sleeve blouse requires 1 yard. Just as popular is the princess dress (No. 8886) with plenty of swing to the skirt. The panties have a smooth front yoke, and an elastic band at the back holds them in place. Make it in printed or plain silk, taffeta or cotton fabrics. Patterns are sized 4 to 10 years. Size 6 requires 3 yards of 35 inch fabric, together with 4-1/4 yards of braid for trimming.

It gives you plenty of ice cubes at all times . . . new delicious desserts . . . more freedom from kitchen work.

Here's what Mrs. W. E. Combs, Mulhall, Okla., writes: "We think Kerosene Electrolux is a wonderful refrigerator and does more than you claim it will do. We have had our Electrolux just about a year and it has been in use every day and the cost of operation is not over 60c a month. I have had quite a lot of experience with other makes of refrigerators but none of them gave me the real satisfaction that I have had from my Electrolux."

Picture this beautiful, labor-saving Electrolux in your kitchen! And remember: Electrolux operates on ordinary kerosene (Coal Oil) for just a few pennies a day . . . one filling of the tank lasts a week or more. Owners find that savings on refrigerating cost and on food bills make Electrolux actually pay for itself.

The outstanding efficiency of Kerosene Electrolux is the result of its simple operation. A wickless glow-type burner does all the work . . . takes the pace of all moving, wearing parts. Electrolux uses no water. Clip coupon for booklet.
